Exchange is in fair supply and the deand good, though less active than previprivate rooms, at which it is reported some good speeches were made. The working qualities of the Democratic members of the school are to be commended for their having canvassed the school and ascertained just how many votes they could muster.

It had been generally understood that Mr. Hunniston would allow the afternoon for speaking and voting. For once, a political meeting was opened quietly. Miss Holden presided and called the roll, remarking that it should have a good beginning. Well, so it did. It had, as well, a good continuance and a good close.
